

Can you really help yourself?

Is it possible to solve your problems with the aid of a book? Two readers gave it a try...

THE BOOK SOURCE: USE THE POWER OF RESILIENCE TO LIVE THE LIFE YOU WANT by Gill Hasson and Ian Redford
"Nobody goes through life without ups and downs. We all suffer similar misfortunes. The key is how you react to them. With Bounce, you are ready to face any adversity. Nothing is impossible."

Nia Rana, 37, from Hounslow, Middlesex, has been married to Naj, 46, for four years. She is a full-time mum to Ayla, three, and Adam, two.

I'm a positive person by nature, but not even cheery old me can put a positive slant on the past six months.

Until the summer, I was a busy mum, running around after Ayla and Adam.

But suddenly my whole life fell apart. I'd been noticing blood when I went to the loo and tests revealed bowel cancer.

Then, Nia developed chronic stomach pains and nearly died during an eight-hour operation for a perforated bowel.

And the following month, my lovely, active mum Beena, 67, had a devastating stroke and brain haemorrhage, which left her unable to speak and paralysed down her right side.

In October, I had an operation to remove part of my appendix and bowel. Now I'm starting six months of intensive chemo.

I'm trying not to moan, but I can't help feeling powerless. What if the chemo leaves me too weak to look after the kids? And I can't stop wondering if I thought this on myself by not having the husband lifestyle in my twenties.

The worry keeps me awake at night, where I sit eating pink food for comfort. I'm brainstorming and need guidance too.

Nia says, 'I feel in control now'

This book speaks so much sense. It's right for me because it's all about regaining control of your life.

It talks about how the people around you can affect your well-being. So, since reading the book, I've decided to forget about friends who haven't been supportive. Instead, I'm concentrating on those like my best friend Mary, who's been by my side through all this.

I've stopped relying on others to make me feel good about myself – for instance, I've started buying myself flowers every week.

And I no longer blame myself for the cancer – but I cut out junk food. Already, I feel stronger and better equipped to fight this battle, and I've set myself a goal – to run Cancer Research UK's Race for Life next summer.

With thanks to www.cancerresearchuk.org

'Worry keeps me awake'

Nia is now ready to confront difficult situations head-on

